

In my opinion the outrage caused over the skit played before this past weeks MNF game is ridiculous. It was supposed to be funny, and supposed to be entertaining. All of the outrage over a woman in a towel, and a black athlete is just stupid. Every single day there are dozens of worse things on television. Anyone who had a problem with that skit needs to open their eyes to the real problems facing this world. You morons at the FCC are busy wasting your time trying to control what kids see on television, when the real problems are found in the homes themselves. Parents who teach their kids racism, and don't teach them respect for others and the world is more of a problem than a beautiful woman in a towel on prime-time TV. If you don't want to see sex, and suggestive behavior on TV, then either watch PBS or don't watch at all. I am utterly disgusted by the outrage this has caused. I am sick and tired of people focusing on things like this as the cause for moral decline in America. Human nature forces us to seek for entertainment, and the entertainment that humans want involves things that we can't see in real life. Sexy women, and sexy men are on tv because they usually aren't around in real life. Sex is something that is natural and healthy. Its time to stop covering our childrens eyes, and closing their minds. We need to educate them, prepare them for what the world offers. Only then will a woman in a towel, be taken for what it is; a woman in a towel.